The fire still burns in Mr. Baldwin

JAMES BALDWIN
"It would be a disaster"

(Indicate page, name of newspaper, city and state.)
THE EVENING NEWS
LONDON, ENG.

In a quietly English, antique-filled town house where the back windows overlook a walled garden decorated by a Lake and trompe l'oeil, James Baldwin is writing about Malcolm X.

The contrast between the Chelsea surroundings and the Black Muslim leader's life could hardly be more extreme. Mr. Baldwin seems not to notice it. He retires into himself and looks the door when he wants to write, ignoring outside stimuli.

He knew Malcolm X (who was assassinated in New York two years ago) well. "I was very fond of him and I think he was very fond of me.

"We always disagreed about dogma—the blue-eyed devils theory—but Malcolm had repudiated that himself before he died. It's a tremendous life—a man born in unimaginable conditions who managed to educate himself in prison.

The courage

"He had the courage to go even farther than that and repudiate everything he had learned and start all over again."

The outcome of his stay in London will be a play about the Black Muslim which Ella Kazan is to direct on Broadway next year.

Mr. Baldwin author of "Go

Tell It On The Mountain" and "The Fire Next Time," is a disarming man for so vehement a civil rights fighter. But at 43 the fire still burns fiercely just below the surface.

He still hopes we can avoid the United States tragedy in coming to terms with racial questions.

"One of the things I have observed around the world—and it's a bitter observation—is that many people wish to become more like the Americans. From my point of view that would be an unmitigated disaster.

"I can see why, it looks very attractive from afar. But I know what's in the package."
